A big challenge in the development of commercial ultrasound scanners, particularly of the real time systems, is to improve the dynamic range of the transducer elements. Indeed, it is generally known in the art that the dynamic range of the acoustic response of a piezoelectric transducer is inherently limited by the intrinsic piezoelectric characteristics of that transducer. It has been proposed to overcome this problem by using a plurality of active transducer elements, thereby amplifying the total detected acoustic signal. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 5,305,631 to Carr et al, the contents of which are incorporated by reference herein, discloses a method and apparatus for obtaining an ultrasound image using a plurality of active transducer elements. Specifically, the described method and apparatus uses a transducer array having active elements having predetermined spatial characteristics, the active elements being electrically connected to a front end electronic unit which conditions electrical signals from the active elements for processing by a controller. The transducer elements are also electrically connected by a switching matrix to one or more rear end units having scan lines and associated circuitry which sample the active elements. It is also known in the art to implement electronic circuitry inside the transducer so that each element generates its own electrical signal which is proportional to the acoustic response of that element. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 4,802,482 to Muehleman et al. the contents of which are incorporated by reference herein, teaches an ultrasonic transducer arrangement having active elements and a low noise amplifier which amplifies the electrical signal generated by each active element to provide a local time-delayed signal representation of the transducer response. A further example of active

A 61-year-old woman underwent clipping of a symptomatic and angiographically demonstrated giant aneurysm of the carotid artery. The aneurysm was incompletely excised because of the clips accidentally squeezing the common carotid artery. The aim of this case report is to demonstrate the possibility of an intraoperative course of the carotid artery occlusion during the supraclinoid portion of the aneurysm. The clip-induced spasm is a rare but important phenomenon. The authors suggest that the "guide wire" technique can be used as a means of monitoring the occlusion of the distal portion of the common carotid artery in the presence of an incompletely excised coiled aneurysm.Chinmaya Nagar Chinmaya Nagar () is a locality in the township of Nehru Nagar, named after Chinmaya Mission's founder, Swami Chinmayanand. The locality is also called Chinmaya Colony. It is located in West Delhi. Demographics Delhi's Gausghala, a breeding ground for 30,000 cows belonging to the Chinmaya Mission, is also located in Chinmaya Nagar. Chinmaya Mission The Chin 3e33713323
