Secondary aortoduodenal fistulas are associated with very high mortality rates and represent a rare but life-threatening condition. The authors present the case of a 71-year-old woman with a four-year history of Crohn disease and chronic duodenitis who developed a severe abdominal syndrome with a rapidly expanding retroperitoneal hematoma with an abdominal wall fistula into the abdominal aorta. Computed tomography revealed a duodenal ulcer on the second and third duodenal portions and chronic inflammation of the third part of the duodenum. Thirty-three days later she developed acute pancreatitis and died. Postmortem histopathologic examination revealed a secondary aortoduodenal fistula at the site of the previous duodenal ulcer with severe acute pancreatitis complicated by multiple microabscesses and small-bowel wall edema. In the literature, this was the first case of a secondary aortoduodenal fistula associated with acute pancreatitis.Q: How can I make a sequence appear on a plot?
